Initially, used plastic bottles are collected and transported to a recycling facility. At this stage, the bottles are sorted to remove non-plastic materials such as labels and caps. Next, the bottles are cleaned thoroughly to eliminate any contaminants. Once cleaned, they are shredded into small flakes, which are then melted down to form a viscous liquid.

The molten plastic is subsequently molded into new bottles or other plastic products through extrusion or injection molding processes. These newly manufactured items are then cooled, inspected for quality, and finally packaged for distribution.

Overall, the process emphasizes a continuous cycle aimed at reducing waste and conserving resources by transforming used bottles into reusable products.

Features:

- Clear chronological sequence.
- Use of passive voice appropriately.
- Precise vocabulary related to manufacturing and recycling.
- Cohesive paragraph with clear topic sentences.

3. Multiple Charts and Data Sets (Comparative Analysis)

Example Question:

The table below shows the average monthly temperatures (°C) in three cities. Summarize the information by selecting and reporting the main features, and make comparisons where relevant.

Conversely, in winter, City Z records the lowest temperatures?about 5°C in January?compared to City Y's 10°C. City X maintains a relatively steady temperature, averaging between 15°C and 25°C across the year.

The data suggest that City Y has a more pronounced seasonal variation, whereas City Z's climate is milder and cooler overall.

Features:

- Clear comparison of data sets.
- Use of comparative language ("more pronounced," "relatively cooler").
- Accurate referencing of figures.
- Well-organized structure.

4. Process and Causal Diagrams

Example Question:

The diagram below shows the process of producing electricity using solar panels. Describe the main stages involved.

Band 9 Model Answer:

The diagram illustrates the process of generating electricity through solar panels, beginning with sunlight absorption and culminating in power distribution.

Initially, sunlight strikes the solar panels, which consist of photovoltaic cells that convert solar energy into direct current (DC) electricity. This DC electricity then flows into an inverter, which transforms it into alternating current (AC), suitable for household and industrial use.

Subsequently, the AC electricity is transferred to a control unit that monitors and regulates the power output. From there, the electricity is transmitted via cables to the electricity grid, ready for distribution to homes and businesses.

This process exemplifies a renewable energy method that harnesses sunlight to produce clean, sustainable electricity with minimal environmental impact.
